APPENDIX 'A'

Probation Overview

AA01. Purpose

The Special Insertion Service Probation serves the purpose to filter and induct man of certain caliber who match the doctrine of Special Insertion Service through evaluation and rigorous filter process.

AA02. Probationary Status

During the period an Officer/WO/NCO/Enlisted is in the probation they will not be addressed as their ranks, rather every candidate will be addressed as a "Probie".

Any operation/deployment/event of any kind, combat or non-combat, every probie will be evaluated as a Probie.

AA03. Instructor & Evaluator

Instructors will be the forefront of evaluation process. An existing SIS member will be assigned instructor (only for the said period of probation).

Instructors will evaluate each probie and report the evaluation to the Adjutant, Military Training Command. The final evaluation to be done by the Adjutant, Military Training Command.

However, finally fate of the probies' application and evaluation to be resting with the HQ, KSOL.

Candidate Standards

BA04. Discipline & Conduct

In Special Insertion Service we are looking for candidates who can fight with our doctrine. (Please read Doctrine Document for more info).

Men who have professional knowledge and the ability to take objectives and execute it in the way they deem to be fit, without direction of the Central Command. Candidates are expected to be disciplined enough to listen but not so that they act like the conventional ordinary soldiers.

Wait for further instructions.

APPENDIX 'C'

Probationary Training

CB06. Orientation

The Special Insertion Service works as a small, quick to deploy and highly trustable element. Capable of land, air and sea deployment and inter-operability with the conventional ordinary army. The SIS was raised as an element who can go where ordinary men would not dare to.

There is no one single way/method/style of combat for the SIS. SIS does things the way they see fit. Any candidate expecting any style/form of combat from SIS is WRONG at a BIBLICAL SCALE. SIS cannot be defined in words, in simple terms it is just a small, rogue, mad element meant to fight like "Dogs".

CB07. Training Course

DEPENDS TOTALLY ON THE INSTRUCTOR'S WILL.

APPENDIX 'D'

What The Actual F*ck We're Looking For?

 AI NOTICE: Appendix 'D' was generated using AI. Reviewed by 'Obi'.*

DC08. The Candidate

SIS is not looking for the loudest, the most decorated, or the individual who can simply follow a perfectly written set of instructions. We are looking for individuals who can be trusted to function when there is no clear answer, no constant direction, and no one available to tell them what to do next. A suitable candidate should demonstrate composure, intelligence, initiative, adaptability and the ability to make sound decisions while operating as part of a team.

DC09. Initiative

A candidate is expected to think beyond the immediate instruction. We are looking for individuals who recognize what needs to be done and take appropriate action without requiring every step to be explained to them. Initiative does not mean acting recklessly or disregarding command; it means understanding the objective, assessing the situation and contributing towards its completion without becoming dependent on constant supervision.

DC10. Adaptability

No operation will always develop according to plan. SIS candidates must therefore demonstrate the ability to adapt when circumstances change, when an approach fails, or when the expected solution is no longer available. We are looking for personnel who can remain useful under pressure, reassess the situation and continue working toward the objective rather than becoming ineffective when conditions become unfamiliar.

DC11. Judgement

The ability to make a decision is not enough; the candidate must demonstrate the ability to make the right decision for the situation. SIS personnel are expected to understand consequences, recognize unnecessary risks and distinguish between situations requiring immediate action and situations requiring restraint. Good judgement is demonstrated through decisions that benefit the individual, the element and the overall objective.

DC12. Teamwork

SIS does not seek individuals who simply want to operate alone. A candidate must be capable of working independently while remaining an effective member of an element. They must understand when to lead, when to support, when to communicate and when to allow another member to take responsibility. The strongest candidate is not necessarily the one who stands out the most, but the one who consistently makes the entire element more capable.

DC13. Character

Above all else, SIS requires personnel who can be trusted. Competence can be improved through training, but character, reliability and personal responsibility must come from the individual. Candidates will therefore be observed not only for what they can accomplish, but for how they conduct themselves when nobody is directly supervising them, when they make mistakes, and when circumstances become difficult.

DC14. The Standard

There is no single personality, playstyle or method that defines a suitable SIS candidate. The Service is looking for individuals who can think, adapt, decide and act while remaining reliable to their element and committed to the objective. A candidate who requires constant direction may be competent, but a candidate who can understand the objective and determine how best to accomplish it is the standard SIS seeks.
